Sucker Control

Several farm magazines carried articles last summer about a new hormone discovery that would control suckers on tobacco. Many tobacco farmers became interested in this material. With the shortage of farm labor, the chemical control of suckers is important.

This new hormone discovery is referred to as MH30. Experiments were conducted on bright tobacco in ten counties during the growing season, with 45 demontsrations. 23 indicated that they got good results; 19 medium control; and 3 poor control.

Experiments were conducted with dark tobacco in 4 counties, at 16 locations. 9 reported good control; 2, medium, and 5 reported poor results. At six of the locations reports showed that a great deal of tobacco showed leaf yellowing; 3 reported very little yellowing; and 7 reported none. In 3 cases, reports indicate that the use of this material lowered the quality of the cured leaf.

For 1956, Virginia will not recommend this material as a means of sucker control until further experiments are conducted.

For those tobacco growers who plan to use any material for sucker control in 1956, the safest procedure seems to be the use of an oil emulsion applied at the recommended rates.

Additional Income for Farmers

Reports in the newspapers indicate that dark tobacco will be cut another 15% for this coming year. With these drastic reductions occuring it will mean that many farmers must find other means of securing an adequate income for the family. There are at least two opportunies farmers in Appomattox County might look towards.

The first is commercial egg production. A rerepresentative of a large hatchery has contacted the County Agent and asked that he determine if there are farmers in Appomattox County who would be interested in producing eggs for hatchery use. This particular hatchery is looking for at least five producers in Appomattox County. To go into this type operation however, will require an investment in a house suitable for housing a minimum of five hundred birds. The cost of such a house varies with the type materials used and the number of labor-saving devices installed. A very modern laying house has recently been constructed in an adjoining county with many of the labor-saving devices, at a cost of 75c per square foot. Where there is sufficient labor, on the farm, however, some of the labor-saving devices could be eliminated thus lowering the cost of construction considerably.

Interested farmers should contact the county agent, whereby a meeting might be arranged for them to get the hatchery representatives and have them go over the proposition with them.

A second alternative is the feeding of steers. Many farmers in Appomattox County this year have produced an over-abundance of grain and hay, and are selling on the markets for little over the cost of production. Grain and roughage can be marketed through cattle at a greater profit than by selling it on existing markets.

Land and pasture requirements for steer feeding are not high as they are for cow-calf herd production. Since many farmers will need to make adjustments in their farming operations during this coming year and in the years ahead, they should seriously consider feeding a minimum of 30 to 35 steers.

On Thursday night, January 12th, at the Court House, Curtis Mast, Extension Animal Husbandman, and C. P. McClaugherty will present a discussion on the feeding of steers. All interested farmers are invited to attend.

New Organizations

A highlight of the year in Appomattox was the formation of a Junior Chamber of Commerce. This group has already contributed to the progress of the community and has high hopes for the future.

Likewise, a Junior Woman's Club was organized, to add to the list of civic clubs in Appomattox.

The town remembered its water shortages of the drough years of 1953 and 1954, and arranged for a new well to bolster the water supply. An excellent volume of water was tapped, but immediately difficulties arose due to high mineral content in water lines, but this situation had eased greatly at the year's end, due to treatment.

County News Features

The year 1955 saw a gradual increase in the development of pasture in the county, a slightly better average marketing season for a reduced tobacco acreage, focusing of attention of the planting of pine seedlings so as to produce more marketable timber, and a growing concern as to federal policies affecting the livelihood of those who live on the soil.

A new County Agent, James A. Smith, took over in the county, and the county lost a veterinarian, as Dr. T. Hyler moved to Blacksburg.

Of great comfort to the people of the county was the locating here of Dr. Stanley Boyce, to help fill the gap left by the passing of Dr. D. A. Christian jr. and Dr. D. A. Christian III. Dr. F. Jones established a medical practice here.

Activity in Sports

On the sports scene, the top news of the year was the use of the new gymnasium at Appomattox High School. Baseball continued its fadeout. Softball had a good year. A. H. S. had a fair season in football, showing well in its own league, but losing to three Group One schools. Basketball boomed bright at year's end, with both A. H. S. boys and girls teams standing well in league competition.

Churches in the county had an outstanding year. Liberty Baptist at Appomattox dedicated a new educational plant, and there were several changes of pastors in the county.
